Photoshop functions are very similar to those in other image editing programs (such as Adobe Photoshop Elements), but Photoshop's interface is much easier to use. Photoshop comes in two versions: Creative Suite (for desktop publishing) and Photoshop Elements. You can either buy an _all-in-one_ package or pay $120/month for subscription. As with any software, version upgrades are available. After you get used to using Photoshop, you may find it very effective for advanced image manipulation. The interface is ideal for touch-screen interaction. Photoshop includes numerous brushes, a variety of gradients, and layer masks that enable creating new layers with transparency — all while you're able to check out a fully working, modified image on the screen.

Q: Can a resource variable be declared as nonfinal to avoid dead code? From MSDN A variable is said to be a resource if it is declared without an initializer, takes up space in memory, and is considered a handle to that space of memory. When a resource is declared in C#, it is not finalized, and therefore cannot be garbage collected. I'm trying to understand this concept in a practical way. For example, say there's a resource (an object) which we want to be local to the method that uses it (and therefore final) and the local method is implemented this way void LocalMethod() { Resource Resource1 = new Resource(); Resource Resource2 = new Resource(); } Now, say inside LocalMethod, we wanted to use resource 1 and 2, but get rid of resource 2. There's a couple ways we can accomplish this. One way would be, as in the example above, to declare resource 2 as final final Resource Resource2 = new Resource(); However, this would mean that we can't use Resource2 later in the method (as it would be collected early). Another option would be to declare Resource2 as non-final Resource Resource2 = new Resource(); This would effectively mean that the resource "obviously" shouldn't be used any further, but since it's local, how does it matter what the type of that local method is? A: Resource is just syntactic sugar for System.Object (or any of the subclasses of Object) Your first example is like this class MyClass { Resource Resource1 = new Resource(); Resource Resource2 = new Resource(); } Which is also pretty much equivalent to this (example in C#) class MyClass { object objResource1 = new Resource(); object objResource2 = new Resource(); Resource Resource1 = (Resource)objResource1; Resource Resource2 = (Resource)objResource2; } Resource really shouldn't be used. Your first example may sound

Murray, in a TV interview, did not come across as the nicest celebrity in the room. Murray was the first celebrity to talk about the case and has sought to distance himself from his comments. "I'm not the only one that's talking," he said. Murray also said he wanted to know why the victims were not afforded the same consideration as "someone with no money or nothing". But while Murray's comments still fly in the UK, they have never made it into the mainstream media. "I can understand why there's not been a lot of media interest in this case," Simon Fowler, a police witness, said after the hearing. "The media coverage has been very muted. I'd put that down to one of two reasons - either the family do not want to talk to the media, which they've been approached by a number of media outlets, or the family don't want to talk about the case for another reason." Mr Fowler told BBC News that the family did not want to tell their story, though he noted that their request had been made to the media. He said he was surprised by Murray's TV interview, as he did not know that anyone else was making similar comments. Arresting officers image caption Cross prosecuting after the first court hearing and arresting officers The other arresting officer is Brian Paul, who told the court that Gurney was "extremely violent". The officer said he asked Gurney to stop, but that Gurney became verbally abusive. He claimed he told Gurney it was "not a good idea to talk to me like that", before getting out of the car and arresting him. The court heard that Gurney had "swung" Paul's arms, as well as a number of other officers, and was clearly under the influence of drink and drugs at the time. The prosecution also said Gurney had been aggressive towards dogs, claiming he had bitten one animal on the leg. There were some strange aspects to the case, as well. One of the arresting officers, Sgt Walker, told the court that Gurney's car needed a new battery in it. He told the court that the battery was changed at Edinburgh Crown Court, and that the battery he had seized was in perfect condition. The prosecution claimed the car was seized at Glasgow Sheriff Court. The defence tried to persuade the judge that
